

A PASSION FOR RESTORATION

Image your kid runs into the house and all of a sudden you hear a crash. You run to see grandmother's porcelain bowl lying on the floor with little Johnny sitting there trying to put the pieces back together.

Not long ago, I got one of those calls...an antique 19th century large statue had been knocked down by a family dog. The piece was a family treasure and they were devastated seeing it in pieces after it had survived several generations.

After restored the piece shows no signs of restoration. The family was so thrilled to receive their bronze statue back as it was before. They promised to display the beautiful bronze piece in a much safer place, out of the reach of the dog. This is just one of the many stories I hear as people call about their broken antique porcelain, pottery, marble, bronze, ivory, objects made of bone and damaged paintings.

With 20 years of experience, I have seen it all. For those two decades, I have been working as a Decorative Art restorer in the Great Seattle area in Washington. Restoration is not work it me, I love what I do and I live to help collectors restore their damaged pieces. There are always new materials coming on the market for restoration as well as new techniques. I often get ask how long will it take me to restore an item. Each piece is special and it depends on damage, cost of the materials and how much cleaning and retouching is required. Quotes are always given before I start the restoration. Please feel free to contact me with questions.
